Aging, Immunity, and Organ Health

The Keystone meeting Aging: Immune Function and Organ Health will bring together experts to explore how the immune system shapes organ health, longevity, and strategies for rejuvenation. Recent discoveries reveal that aging is influenced by immune function and inflammation, opening new avenues for therapies to counter aging and age-related disease.

This meeting will integrate cutting-edge insights in immune biology and organ science, focusing on immune regulation of organ preservation and communication. In partnership with the Keystone Innate Immunity meeting, it will spark collaborations and advance strategies that harness the immune system to improve human health and extend healthy lifespan.

Featured Programming:

- Targeting Innate Immunity for Healthy Aging
- Inflammation, Immune Function, Senescence
- Organ Regeneration and Aging
- Inflammaging
- Organ–Organ Communication and Systemic Aging
- Biomarkers, Aging Clocks, and Human Longevity
- Panel: Perspectives: Personalized Medicine & Patient-Centered Strategies
- Symposia Spotlights: Late-breaking research presentations selected from abstract submissions
- Career Roundtable & Networking
